Lafayette and her environs are enrobbed in a prodigal profusion of living green. Many of the old landmarks have entirely disappeared, and in their places have come up new improvements in keeping with the progressive spirit of the times. The palatial home of Mr. and Mrs. Burbank, the beautiful residence of Dr. Littlefield, the cozy cottages of Dr. Calbreath, Frank O'Connor and Dr. Watts, the neat white cottage of the Keltys', nestled in a wilderness of bloom and shade, and the pretty and cozy little houses of the Hendersons, Poppletons, Johnsons, Careys, Gates, Chrismans, Hembree, Ids, Westerfields, and many others who favor the equal rights cause, furnish indisputable refutation of the theory that the Woman Suffrage element has no regard for home.

The Cooke farmhouse on the hill across the river has lost its characteristic coat of white and donned the drab habiliments of advancing years. The Cooke farm is a model establishment, indoors and out, and one well worthy the emulation of thousands of farmers who seem to work and manage from year to year only to discover what it is in the way of luxury even comfort that they best can get along without. Farmers and farmers' lives too often live, grow old and die in a ceaseless struggle to increase acres. wjocj they will leave behind at death for heirs to quarrel over.

Lafayette is just now under a very thick financial cloud, the result of the winter freeze-out in the surrounding wheat fields. Farmers who sold their wheat last Fall for 80 cents per bushel were obliged to re-seed their fields this Spring with wheat purchased from abroad at a heavy premium. Few hundred dollars of extra expense falls heavily upon most any farmer, rather, upon his wife and daughters, who are expected to economize sufficiently in their departments to make the deficit good. The men who have given up his pipe or tobacco because of the freeze-out, but accidents are quite common wherein women have foregone their Summer millines and the usual amount of current literature on account of it.

Merchants feel the stagnation in business quite as sensibly as farmers, for when the latter do not trade or pay up the former are pressed by wholesale houses. And so it goes. The farm is the basis of all industry and the center of all prosperity, and business languishes in every direction when the products of the farm are out of market.

A.S.D.

Many of the homes that are mentioned above are still standing--forty years later. The neat white cottage of the Keltys' (The Robb home) is still nestled in a wilderness of bloom and shade. The Dr. Littlefield residence has been painted and fixed up. The cozy cottages of Dr. Watts and Dr. Calbreath are still being lived in. The Gates' house is just west of the Museum and, although much altered, is still in a fine state of preservation. The cozy little houses of the Chrismans, the Hembrees, and the Westerfields are still with us, and the Cooke farmhouse "of advancing years" is still on the hill across the river. The palatial home of the Burbanks burned in about 1914 while A. P. Fletcher was living in it.

FIRE

I am very sorry to report that fire early in January has destroyed the printing shop of Clarence Neal in McMinnville.
Mr. Neal has been doing much of the actual printing of the bulletin for the past year and at no cost to the society for his time.
