Hi Everyone,

Every year about this time I make mention of how fast the summer went. Once again I am amazed about the passing of time. Next week I am going to my family reunion in Nebraska. Speaking of the passing of time, I started out with 33 first cousins, now I have 17.

I return on the day of the October meeting and am not sure I can arrive back in town in time to attend.

The agreement was signed whereby the YCHS and the Genealogical Society will share space at the museum. We are looking forward to working together next and in the future.

When was the last time you visited the museum? I believe you would be pleasantly surprised at the number of changes that have been made. New exhibits (Uniforms, buttons & etc.) are now in place. The volunteers have spent many hours rearranging and completing these exhibits. You will be tested next month on specific items so better get up there and have a look.

Check out the article else where in the newsletter about the George Fox Share Day at the museum. Seven hours later, two truck loads of yard debris, and a lot of work the day ended. The 10 girl, 2 men group left a much tidier museum. It is such a pleasure to work with this group as they constantly thank you for letting them come and help.

Sincerely, Shirley

NEW MUSEUM SITE UPDATE

We are still waiting for the completion of the transfer of the additional 7 acres from the McPhillips & Kauer families to the YCHS. Lot line adjustments and the partitioning process does take time.

In the meantime we are proceeding with the site work. Since we were not able to obtain water service from McMinnville we will drill a new well. Arrangements have been made to do this sometime in November. An electrical engineer will be hired to work with McMinnville Water & Light to locate the power source and bring it to the existing building and be ready for future use.

Anyone who would like to donate to this development is certainly welcome to do so. Plans to complete the construction of the agricultural building are in the works for 2007. The second workshop with the architect Don Stastny is scheduled for Wed., Oct. 11th, at 2:00 pm at the Log Museum. Anyone interested in this project are welcome to sit-in on this meeting. For more information please contact any member of the board or planning committee. Shirley V.
50th Anniversary Cookbook
To submit a page for our cookbook, write your recipe down on a sheet of paper or recipe card, and submit it with a photograph, past or present, and drop them off at the museum Wednesdays, Fridays or Saturdays between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. Or you can bring it to the next YCHS meeting. The photo can be of your family or of a place in Yamhill County, and it should be 5”x7” or smaller. It will be returned to you. Make sure to include a description of what the photo contains, 150 words or less. If you have questions call Lorna at 843-3251 or Marge at 843-3081. We truly want to celebrate the past and present of our county and our organization and you and your friends are encouraged to submit a recipe and photo.

COVERED WAGON TRAILER
The total cost for having the covered trailer built was over $9000. We increased the axle load to 10,000 pounds which will allow additional uses for the trailer besides just the covered wagon. Ace Trailer in Salem is building the trailer. This will have a ramp and cable that will allow the loading and unloading of the wagon. There is a “man door” on the side that will be used to enter the trailer to see exhibits on display along with the wagon. We are hoping the end of October for delivery. Funding for the trailer is the $6,000 grant from Prudential Corp. & Prudential First State Realty. There is approximately $400 in a fund from the original wagon program. You can see we are about $1100 short. Efforts are being made to obtain these needed funds. If you would like to donate to help this cause please contact Gloria Lutz - 472-7563 or Shirley - 434-0567 (submitted by Shirley Venhaus)

New Museum Exhibits
This month and next we will feature uniforms worn by our armed service men and women. Also, artifacts dating to WWI to the present will be displayed. We were pleased to have uniforms loaned to us by members and community friends.

Thanks to new volunteer David Inman we have two new exhibits featuring memorabilia from past wars. David has organized many of our communication items and they can now be examined in detail, and additional information is now shown with these items. David is a senior at Sheridan High School, and we appreciate his interest in Yamhill county history.

“The doctor is on his way” says the sign in our newly organized exhibit featuring medical artifacts. Medical and dental instruments, wheel chairs and many more items have been reorganized, making it easier to examine. Don’t forget to mark your calendar to visit our museum.

Serve Day 2006—George Fox University
The Museum facility received a good cleaning, dusting, yard cleanup, etc., on September 13th. The group of students from the University in Newberg were a pleasure to work with.

From our Volunteer Chair
I thank all those who gave of themselves this year... not once did I need to fill in for an absence. After the Genealogical Society has relocated into our log building, the Wednesday work group will begin sorting and recording the 10,000 plus buttons in our collection. Therefore, this relaxing project will be ideal for volunteers with physical limitations. This group also assists Marge with family biography filings, e-mail research responses and research visitors. The Friday work group will continue to scan and perform database entry on our photo and postcard collection (Fridays are not open to the public this time of year). Saturdays continue to be the busiest day for tours and research visitors. A special thanks to Lorna Grauer and Jean Sartor for their extended effort to rotate and reorganize our display cabinets.

One of the great Yamhill County escapades involves the coming of the railroad. Railroads enjoyed great vogue on the East Coast immediately after the Civil War. By 1867, a transcontinental line was in the making and the nation was gripped in a railroad mania. With the coming of the railroad, towns would not be so isolated. So every town in the country wanted access. The train was a wonder to behold. Great celebrations were held when the first one arrived. With such excitement, it was not hard to raise the capital to finance this new but expensive adventure. Oregon was ready to bring the railroad to its towns. The real prizes to the investors, if a venture proved successful, were the accompanying land grants from Congress. The federal government provided rail builders with 20 alternate sections of land per mile, 10 on each side of the tracks. The grants were awarded as soon as a company finished 20 miles of track and ran the first train over it. However, Congress limited the Oregon portion of the program to “such company organized under the laws of Oregon as the Legislature of that state shall designate.”

With the Legislature effectively controlling the land grants, its favor could be bought. Joseph Gaston joined a group of investors from Portland in forming The Oregon Central Railroad Co. in 1866. His company filed its articles of incorporation on Oct. 6 and won land grant approval from the Legislature.

He was appointed secretary of the board of incorporators. In April 1867, he began taking subscriptions for company stock. Gaston had the main say on where the road would run, and he believed the west side of the Willamette River offered the best route. There were fewer and smaller rivers to bridge, fewer rises and hills to deal with and more people to support the plan. Backers included a group of McMinnville investors led by William T. Newby. Newby wanted the line to bypass Lafayette, then the county seat, and cut through McMinnville instead.

Gaston felt he had a sure thing. Then S.G. Elliott, a railroad promoter from California, showed up. Elliott was associated with a California group scheming to gain control of the Oregon Central Railroad Co. and merge it with their California Railroad Co. He filed articles of incorporation with the state under the name, Oregon and California Railroad Co. At first, Gaston welcomed the prospective infusion of new capital. But to his surprise, Elliott decided, with some powerful encouragement, that the line should run up the east side of the Willamette instead. Gaston put up a gallant fight. After all, he had already graded several miles of right of way on the west side. But Elliott insisted in pursuing an eastside route. And the two became rivals in separate ventures rather than partners in a joint venture as anticipated.

At that point, the Oregon Legislature decided land grants should go to only one of the companies, not both. It decided the first one to get a line up and running would get the land, shutting out the other. The rival companies each broke ground in early 1868 in Portland. The race was on! Gaston had a head start, which rallied investors to his venture. With Elliott’s financing drying up in response, the westsider appeared to have the prize within reach.

Then wealthy hotel and railroad man Ben Holladay of Seaside formed the Salem Oregon Railroad Co. to take over the eastside venture. He wanted the grants, and he found a way to get them without the necessity of getting his line built before Gaston’s. Holladay, the first Oregonian to hire and organize a team of lobbyists, threw extravagant parties for legislators and showered them with extravagant gifts. He later admitted there had been other considerations as well — more than $35,000 in cash, a very large sum for that day. But the interloper soon ran into problems of his own.

First, the Oregon Supreme Court ruled his Salem Oregon Railroad Co. had not been legally incorporated, thus was not eligible for federal land grants. Second, he got into trouble with a group of German investors, as it had provided him with $10.5 million in financing and he could account for only half of it. Holladay claimed the money had gone to pay off legislators, judges and businessmen, but he was simultaneously spending heavily to acquire property for himself. Feeling something was amiss, the investors dispatched Henry Villard to represent their interests and he ousted Holladay in 1874.

Villard quickly hatched a plan to seize full control of railroad building in Oregon. He felt the state had the potential to be a transcontinental player. Gaston never gave up on his pursuit of either the westside railroad or the grants he felt were his due as a result. But he found the going difficult. With continuing financial and political support from the city of Portland and counties of Washington, Yamhill and Polk, he gradually got his road extended 20 miles south. By 1873, it had come to pass through a pair of towns named after him — Gaston and St. Joe. He said his supporters felt, “No man should represent Oregon in Congress who could not labor to secure another grant of land in aid of their road.” But the Panic of 1873 halted progress. Then Villard arrived on the scene.

It would be about 10 more years before the line pushed through to McMinnville. And it took even longer for the line to reach its southern terminus in Corvallis. Meanwhile, Villard had extended his tracks south from Portland through Newberg and McMinnville, creating a great "circle of rail." The route was originally plied by steam trains. Later, McMinnville hosted the famous Red Electric. McMinnville reaped a bountiful harvest from this new mode of transportation and the resulting tourist trade. Had he lived long enough, Newby would have swelled with pride when the first train pulled into McMinnville.

Calendar of Events
Our next regular monthly meeting will be held 6:30 p.m., Tuesday, October 10th, at the Yamhill County Public Works Auditorium in McMinnville. Our program this month will be on the Polk County Museum: how they planned, funded, and constructed their new facility at the county fairgrounds in Rickreall.

New Members/Renewals: We welcome new members Henry Chandler, Everett Swain & David Dahle. Henry is a supporter of our society, having donated $100 to us! Thanks for supporting our organization. We invite you all to attend our meetings, visit our museum and become more involved in our local history!
